

A UNIQUE Master of Arts Program: RELIGION, CULTURE AND GLOBAL JUSTICE

PROFESSIONALIZE THROUGH GRADUATE STUDY

Our program prepares individuals to move into professional arenas within and outside of academia. These include international relations and public policy, interreligious dialogue and peacebuilding, refugee and migrant resettlement, institutional human rights and diversity policy, journalism and communications, as well as programming on multiculturalism and community development.

LEARN WITH INTERDISCIPLINARY SCHOLARS

Our faculty, drawn from Laurier's departments of Religion & Culture and Global Studies, are specialists in disciplines across the social sciences and humanities who conduct research around the world. We bring our diverse knowledge and expertise to enrich our student supervision and foster transformative learning and the spirit of free inquiry.

ADDRESS GLOBAL CHALLENGES CREATIVELY

We encourage our graduate students to interrogate conventions and develop new modes of ethical engagement. In doing so, we seek to cultivate the critical skills and knowledge that individuals need to succeed both within the university and beyond, at home and globally.

HELP BUILD MORE JUST COMMUNITIES

Our world faces pressing questions of global justice in relation to issues such as armed conflict, human migration, economic inequality, and environmental change. Alongside questions of policy, the program fosters critical analysis of cultural and religious processes as well as their implications for building cohesive communities in a globalizing world.

*Deadline for first consideration for funding: JANUARY 15
